

Peter Sarik Trio x Beethoven

'It's an honour and an enormous challenge to adapt the works of a great master such as Beethoven.

As with all adaptations, I thought it was very important to retain the original mood and message of each piece.

Also, I tried to imagine that if the master lived now, and he had a superb jazz trio as I do, how he would rearrange his own music.

I believe he would be just as bold, unique and innovative in our times too.

We followed this direction with our adaptations, so we'll probably surprise the audience several times, because we boldly use the rhythms which are in fashion today, the new features of modern jazz and pop.

It's a wonderful game, and it's been proven lots of times that the really great works don't only stand the test of time but placed into our modern environment they get a new life and give the impression as if they had just been composed', said Peter Sarik.
